

Appendix 1

Please note that the number of young parents who achieved an accreditation in December 2010 is yet to be confirmed and does not equal zero as shown in the above diagram. 'Zero' was only used as an entry in place of the actual number of the accreditations achieved only because this piece of data has not yet been confirmed and, therefore, entering any other number could be seen as a misrepresentation of truth. This is not to indicate that outcomes deteriorated as young people's interest and training providers' activity increased. Quite the contrary, once the number of accreditations achieved in the November-December 2010 PWP project has been confirmed, this should be consistent with the rest of the data in the graph, showing an increase from August-September 2010.

What this diagram presents is a process in which SKFF gauge young people's interest (blue line), young parents show their interest in the PWP programme by completing SKFF registration forms during our information sessions (red line), and then, out of the number of young parents who register, a proportion goes on to attend and complete, fully or partially, the PWP programme (green line in the diagram). The number of parents completing the PWP programme is influenced by many external factors, such as learners' personal issues, financial problems or health issues etc.

To conclude, the discrepancy between the number of young parents who show interest and register on the PWP programme and the number of accreditations achieved is a result of the above mentioned (and many more) factors. Again, the last green triangle-point on the vertex is only marked as 'zero' due to the lack of data on the number of accreditations achieved in the November-December 2010, and, therefore, does not represent a decline in numbers.

The diagram with values of the data labels shown. Notice '0' ('Zero') value of the last green triangle-point on the vertex which represents missing data on the number of accreditations received in the December 2010 PWP project.
